S. M. HULIN, Editor and Proprietor.

BLOOMFIELD, N. J., SEPT. 18, 1873.

On account of illness we are reluctantly compelled to ask the indulgence of our readers for any irregularities or short-comings that may be noticed this week.

National Prosperity.

Some ninety years ago we were composed of thirteen Colonies, with only about three millions of inhabitants, occupying the narrow strip of land on the Atlantic coast which has since expanded into a mighty empire, extending from the Atlantic to the Pacific Oceans, and northward to the great lakes, and including the Arctic regions of Alaska. We now have over Forty-five millions of inhabitants.

Forty-five years ago a railroad was unknown, while we now have 50,000 miles of these roads constructed and many thousands miles more projected and in progress, all at a cost of more than twenty-five hundred millions of dollars! There are now in operation over 150,000 miles of telegraph wires spread all over the land. The inventive talents and genius of our people have wonderfully developed the productive power and agricultural resources of the country. Less than forty years ago the Commissioners and one clerk were sufficient to do all the work of the Patent Office. Over sixty examiners are now employed and a force of 300 employees are necessary to do the work of the office. About 20,000 patents are issued annually.

If we still continue to exercise the three important virtues, industry, frugality, and economy, and continue an united people, can we not predict, that early in the nineteenth century we shall be the most prosperous and powerful nation that ever existed, with a population of a hundred millions?

CORRESPONDENCE.

MR. EDITOR:

Allow me through the medium of your valuable journal to call attention to a matter which is now agitating a part of Belleville and Bloomfield.

It is the formation of a new township from the villages of Franklin and Montgomery, in Belleville, and that part of Bloomfield east of the canal. The people living in this section are much dissatisfied with the conduct of affairs in their respective towns, they having to pay excessive taxes and deriving little benefit therefrom. The Town Committees and Commissioners of said townships, although gentlemen who are thoroughly alive to the interests of their villages and who are devoting much of their spare time to the improvement of them, do not seem to realize that the outlying portions of their villages require much attention, as any one can verify by driving upon the roads leading from Bloomfield to Belleville or to Franklin. Under the old system of road districts these streets were properly cared for and kept in at least a passable condition; but since the advent of Boards of Commissioners and new laws regulating township affairs, these streets have been almost entirely neglected. That such a policy is detrimental to the best interests of a town or village is plainly obvious, and it would seem that while the gentlemen composing these commissions are exerting all their powers to make their respective towns a desirable place to reside in, and to induce desirable parties to locate therein, it would occur to them that such parties will not all want to locate exactly in the centre of any village or town, but that many will prefer the more thinly settled parts of the district, while at the same time conferring great benefits upon the town proper. That the people living in the sections where the new township is proposed have just cause of complaint is undeniable; that they have been to complain for years is also true. The interests of a growing town and that of a thinly populated section of country cannot be made always to coincide and it would seem wise perhaps, that they should be separated, if by so doing any advantages would accrue to either. That it would be an immense advantage in this particular case, no one with good and just views would attempt to deny. In Bloomfield and Belleville both have fine school buildings with abundance of funds, while in Montgomery there are scarcely funds enough available to support a third rate school, and the building for school purposes is certainly not an ornament to the environs of a great city. By the change proposed this school district could be greatly enlarged and would be a great benefit and convenience to the people living adjacent. Perhaps considerable opposition will be developed against this change, but such opposition can only come from those who from selfish motives would hinder the improvement and development of this stretch of country. If the authorities "that be" will not help this section to improve, the least they can do is not to hinder when they wish to help themselves.

"FAIRPLAY."

The propeller Ironsides, one of the largest steamers on Lake Michigan, foundered and sank near Grand Haven on Monday. The calamity was caused by the terrific storm prevailing upon the lake. At 11 A. M. the crew and passengers took to the boats, and when the last boat had got about a quarter of a mile away, the steamer sank. There were forty-nine persons on board. Thirty-two reached Grand Haven and the remainder are supposed to have been drowned. The bodies of fourteen were recovered.

REMINISCENCES OF THE LATE WAR.

THE BOMBARDMENT OF FORT FISHER.

One afternoon as we were out on the blockade steamer came along and ordered us to proceed to Fortress Monroe to prepare to engage in the bombardment of Fort Fisher.

It is about this I will write a few lines, thinking it will interest some of your readers, as there were two young men from this village engaged in it. At Fortress Monroe we were engaged in receiving shot, shell, powder and coal. The hands that engaged in loading the famous Butler powder boat came on our ship after their meals. They told us they were filling the ship with powder to be run up near Fort Fisher and then blow it up, thinking it would also demolish the Fort and make it an easy capture. After due preparation we started with a large fleet of men of war.

We escorted the famous New Ironsides down, and when near our destination just outside of the sight of land we came to anchor. What a grand and strange sight it was to see nearly 100 steamers anchored there! We were waiting for the Butler powder boat to do her work. In the mean time we drilled at the guns and prepared the ship for battle. So many boats together attracted the fish, either from curiosity or for something to eat, and we caught thousands of them. We laid there about a week, when one night about two o'clock we were all awakened by a sudden lurch of the ship that almost threw us out of our hammocks. It was caused by the blowing up of the powder boat. We were all up in a minute as we knew our time had come to see the "elephant." We weighed anchor and moved slowly toward the fort. At daybreak we were in sight. And then instead of a fort in ruins as Butler had expected, we saw the fort unimpaired and with every look as though she was ready to welcome us. No sooner did we get within range than she bid us good morning with a salute and some iron. We were all interested and confident of success as we were called to our guns. With 66 other men of war we brought up before the fort and anchored. The transports containing troops under Gen. Butler were anchored just outside of rifle range. With over 300 cannon from the fleet bearing on the fort, throwing at least one shell a second, it was impossible for the gunners in the fort to get a good range of us. But they let us know they were not asleep. The troops under Butler went ashore below the fort, and night came on before they made a charge, as we had expected them to do. At night we withdrew out of range of the fort. We on our ship had escaped without loss of life, although the ship had been struck several times. Night found us a strange set of men, so black from powder-smoke and almost. Next morning we expected again to engage, but on looking out we saw that Butler with all his soldiers had taken to their ships, and would not again go ashore to charge the fort. He got scared without making one attempt to charge the fort. Admiral Porter in command of the fleet was so angry about it he proposed to detail half the sailors to go ashore and take the fort, but after a meeting with all the principal captains, gave up the idea. He said next time he would not trust all the shore work to the soldiers, but send some sailors to do the work. The future attack showed his wisdom in trusting sailors.

Porter ordered the fleet again in the blockade. But about one-third of the sailors must be detailed to go ashore next time and be drilled for it. The writer of this man he had been in the army, was given 25 men to drill every afternoon. In about two weeks we were again ordered to the fort. Gen. Terry was this time in command of the soldiers. We came to the fort and engaged them all day. Near night I was knocked insensible by a flying piece of wood, which although not serious, prevented me from leading my companions ashore next morning. Here I must bring in the name of Thomas Cosgrove, a young man from Bloomfield who was also on the ship. He had the appointment of ship's Corporal and as such had charge of the powder magazine during an engagement. As the men were going ashore Cosgrove asked the Lieutenant if he could not go along. He said "his services could scarcely be spared, but he would not prevent anyone from going that wanted to. So Cosgrove went. The bombardment commenced again and continued till 2 o'clock. When the sailors in front and the soldiers in the rear of the fort, made a charge, the confederates in the fort thought the whole charge was going to be made in the front and were there ready to meet it. I was up in the mast with a spy glass when the charge was made. I can not describe my feelings as I saw those brave men charge direct to the fort, knowing in an instant hundreds of them would be cut down. The moment came. The fort opened. Hundreds fell to the ground dead and wounded; a great many rushed in the sea and were shot down or drowned some escaped by running; others were bound to sell their lives as dearly as possible to the enemy and among them was Thomas Cosgrove. He was not wounded at the first fire, but one that carried the National flag was. Cosgrove picked it up, and called on the others to follow him; at that instant he fell dead pierced with two bullets. These particulars I got from one who feigned death and so escaped. These particulars of the death of my friend Thomas Cosgrove I give that his friends may know how bravely he died. He died with his country's colors in his hand. The soldiers in the rear of the fort were more successful they entered the fort and immediately raised the stars and stripes on one end of it. The battle continued in the fort till 10 o'clock at night when it surrendered, such a scene of rejoicing as that I never shall forget. Instead of the boom of cannons all the steamers (numbering about 100) commenced ringing their bells, blowing their steam whistles, sending up sky rockets and burning red white and blue lights. Such a scene on the ocean was truly grand.

To form some idea of the bombardment, I will state I was loader at one gun, and from that one gun we fired 313 one hundred pound shells.

The Orphans' Picnic.

Last Wednesday was a gala day for the orphans of the Newark Asylum, the children having been invited, by the ladies of Bloomfield, to the pleasure of a Picnic in Weaver's Grove, at which place they arrived about ten o'clock. At noon these sixty or more children were served with a bountiful repast, which had been provided by the ladies of various churches in the place. After the children had been fully satisfied a second table was spread for the ladies in attendance. At two o'clock P. M. an address was made by Rev. Mr. Spellmeyer, reporter read, and the singing by the children added very much to the interest of the exercises. Late in the afternoon the children started for Newark, carrying with them "twelve baskets of fragments that remained," but a barrel or more of provisions, and each child was made happy in the possession of a package of confectionery, and they carried with them that which was still better, a pleasant remembrance of the hospitality and generosity with which they had been received and entertained by our ladies. Thanks are due to those ladies—good and noble women—whose kindness of heart prompted this treat of a day in the woods with all its accompanying pleasures to those little waifs, who homeless and parentless might have been lead into paths of vice and unhappiness, had it not been that the hand of christian sympathy has been reached out to "save to the uttermost."

Euclidian.

On Monday evening of this week, an interesting meeting of this flourishing society was held. The exercises were varied and showed on the part of the members a determination to make coming winter campaign a grand success. The reading room in connection with the above is to be improved and made more inviting, to which the young men of our village are cordially welcomed. It is open from 2 to 9 P. M. Pen, ink and paper are furnished gratuitously to those who are interested in comfort. A good assortment of choice reading matter is always on hand. The lecture season is also close at hand, when something choice may be expected.

OCCASIONAL.

Baker Family Reunion.

The annual reunion of the Baker family took place at the old "Baker homestead," near Mechanicville, N. Y. This was the home of the late James Baker, whose family comprised sixteen sons. Eleven of these are living and eight of them participated in this happy reunion—the oldest being William, now in his seventy-ninth year. One hundred and twenty-six descendants of James Baker were present and enjoyed the bountiful and luxurious viands furnished by their hospitable host, Mr. Bloomfield. Before the refreshments were served the time was spent in social conversation and then in participation in some pleasant religious exercises, which were conducted by Mr. Abel Baker, one of the brothers residing in Bloomfield.

Dr. Stockton, whose card appears in our advertising columns, is a full and reliable dentist. He came to Mount Holly, N. J., highly recommended by ex-Senator Ten Eyck, and others. He has been in Newark now for over a year, has greatly increased the business of the firm of Drs. Colburn, his predecessors. Those of our Bloomfield people who have occasion to require his services will find Dr. Stockton a gentleman of culture and refinement as well as entire master of his profession.

ABOUT TOWN.

It is an anomalous fact that the approaching cold weather has no terrors to the Bloomfielders who have catled cellars.

A fine concert is to be given in the M. Church in this place on Wednesday evening next. Tickets may be procured at S. Carl's store, on Broad street, near the Post Office.

Did you ever hear the noise of a quacking machine when in full operation? Well, that is nothing compared to the clatter that would fill the world if good resolutions were made of glass or crockery ware.

Yesterday was the anniversary of the battle of Antietam, near Sharpsburg, Md. Two of Bloomfield's volunteers were killed in that memorable engagement—Thomas Doyle and James Taylor, both of company A, Thirteenth Regiment.

Vineland has shipped over the New Jersey Southern Railroad, this season, 219,495 pound of grapes, and over the West Jersey road, 177,484 pounds.

We call the attention of our readers to an important sale of lots at Fairview, by P. Weaver Esq., the owner and auctioneer, on Thursday Sept. 25th. The property is finely located on a beautiful elevation, on the line of the Horse Car R. R.

A class in German for beginners has recently been formed under the instruction of Rev. E. Hering. This is a favorable opportunity for any who may desire to commence. Application should be made at once. See advertisement elsewhere.

Thomas Reilly, an escaped lunatic from the asylum at Roseville, was in town on Friday and created quite a sensation. He insisted upon having warrants issued for the arrest of certain citizens. Being assured that his wishes would be complied with, he was at length induced to get in a carriage and was taken back to the asylum.

The Second Anniversary of the Sunday School of the Watessing M. E. Church will be celebrated on Sunday next (21st inst.) morning and afternoon. In the morning Mr. Clark, of Newark, is expected to give a black-board Sermon. In the afternoon there will be several speakers, among them Rev. J. Bannerjee, a native of India, is expected. Visitors will be heartily welcomed.

One evening last week a lady met with a severe fall upon Franklin street, near the Baptist church. Her mishap was owing to the darkness and the unfinished state of the sidewalk. Mr. D. W. Smith passed that way at the time of the accident, and assisted the lady, who was a stranger in town, in reaching the residence of Mr. Maxfield, where she was sojourning. It is to be regretted that our sidewalks are in so dangerous a condition.

The miserable failure of the Eclectic Mutual Life Insurance Company, of New York, will have a tendency to weaken public faith in these smaller companies.
